REDUCTION OF TAXES. Senate resolution favoring a reduction of Mr. Gibson (Republican) said the one great funncial problem to be solved by this Assembly was whether they should levy sufficient taxes to pay interest arising on the State debt. For his part, he was in favor of postponing that payment for the present, and merely collecting sufficient to meet current expenses. He was no repudi-ator, but the postponing of the payment of this interest would injure no one, and was othing more than the holders of the bonds had to expect. These bonds were issued by of the first Legislature assembled after the war. The Republicans were then in power, but there was also, at the time, another party in the State numerically greater. The Democratic party, ough its papers and speakers throughout Tennessee, constantly, repeatedly and openly declared that they would consider the question of repudiating these bonds when they came into power. The purchasers knew this, and that a time would come when the Democratic party would get into power. He had always opposed the issuance of these bonds, and in this respect stood aloof from his party. Now, it was a well known fact that the purchasers of these bonds discounted them by looking forward to their repudiation at a future day, and thus obtained them at from 50 to 60 cents on the dollar. Those bondholders, then, had no just ground of complaint if, in view of the financial embarrassment of the State, the shortness of the crop, and the heavy taxation on the people, decided on reducing the taxes and deferring the payment of the interest on these bonds. It was a part of her financial policy to collect sufficient taxes to pay the current expenses of the govern-ment, and no more, till the State should be in a more prosperous condition.

Mr. Sevier said that most of those old milway bonds sold for 99 cents in the dollar. He. like the Senator from Campbell, (Mr. Gibson) was opposed to the latter issues, but he did not approve of repudiating the liabilities of the State. He would go as far as anyone in reducing the burden of taxation, consistent with an honest and sound financial policy.

Mr. McConnell (Republican) would ask the Senator from Campbell if he recognized the validity of those bonds; or if he thought the State would be any better prepared next year to pay the accumulated interest than they were to pay the accrued interest this He (Mr. McConnell) was opposed to repudiation in any shape. He believed the people of Tennessee were willing and able to meet their liabilities, and if he thought he represented a constituency that was opposed to the payment of honest debts, he would resign and go home to-morrow. Now, what would be the effect of this resolution before the House? Why it would be practically declaring to the Finance Committee that they were in favor of repudiation. He would therefore oppose it.

Mr. Hughes said be was satisfied that one-half of the tax-payers of the district he represented would be unable to pay the taxes this year unless they were reduced. He did not look upon such reduction or deferring the payment of interest to bondholders as leading to repudiation. These men were men of means and they than to prompt payments of interest. He would therefore support the resolution. Mr. Merritt thought a gentleman could the part of this Assembly to reduce the burlen of taxa ion that was weighing them two-thirds of the issue of the Bank of Tennessee had been absorbed. If so, there could be no excuse for continuing the taxes at their present high rate. He was opposed to repudiation, and he only desired to give the over-taxed people some relief—to stay the execution against their lands. He could not see that there could be anything wrong in passing this resolution. He was aware that financial speculators would oppose it. That was to be expected. On the other hand there could be no

On the other hand there could be no doubt that there was talk of repudiation is the streets, but it did not come from the the streets, but it did not come from the substantial men of the country, who were in favor of paying off the indebtedness of the State. After some further discussion the resolution was adopted.

The monthly statement of receipts and disbursements from 1st June, 1870, to 30th September, 1871, sixteen months, gives the bursements $1,971,101.68, leaving a balance of $12,926.27, from which deducting amount against Rust, there remains an actual balance of $2,772.78. Appended to this is a detailed monthly statement. The Treasurer continues regretting that there is not a heavier balance on hand, yet in many respects there are evidences of marked improvement. There are increased manifestations of confidence at home and abroad of the honesty and good purposes of our people. He refers to the decision respecting bank notes of Tennessee in payment of taxes, and states that there remain to be redeemed, of the old issues, $710,000, and perhaps $250,000 of the school warrants made good for taxes in the hands of any person. He refers to delinquent tax payers and states that the poorer class, as a rule are those who pay first their pro rata. He has been increased during the fiscal year by about $25,000,000, but dimpled cheeks. The votes of the judges this increase is confied to a portion of were very much scattered, as indeed they the counties. With a full assessment the rate could be reduced to three mills or even less. He does not think that the State will be in a condition to resume interest pay-ments before January 1874, if then. To pay interest, retire the Tennessee money, cancel all outstanding warrants, and defray current expense from month to month. would require a tax of $1.25 on the hundred. Bondholders do not expect interest under two years, but it should not be delayed beyond that time. After selling any remaining interest in railroads and turnpikes that the State has, the only way to pay off the debt is to levy taxes sufficient to get rid of all Tennessee money receivable for taxes, to pay all outstanding warrants and defray current expenses for 1870-71; then taxes sufficient to run the State government and pay the interest of the entire bonded debt. We must either pay or repudiate. Therefore the rate should be kept at its present standard. When the deferred payments for railroads sold are made, and Tennessee money and warrants redeemed, our State will them be about $20,000,-000, with which taxes will oppressive. The estimated ceipts from taxes for the ensuing year, at the same rate as for the fiscal year just closed, is $4,250,000. The estimated disbursements amount to $4,296,500, or an ex-500. The estimated receipts do not include receipts from delinquent tax lists, but then

INDIAN CONJURERS.

Haking a Mango Tree Grow from the Seed Hereditary Occupations in In-dia Snake-Charmers Bit by a Cobra-Shopping in Beihl Shawl Store of fanick Chund-Indian Costumes. Delhi is famous for the skill of her conjuers and snake-charmers; and Barabbas ar-anged for an exhibition to come off after ranged for an exhibition to come off after our late dinner. There were yet three hours of daylight and we ranged ourselves in a semi-circle on the porch of the hotel— a small and select audience of five persons— with an indefinite number of natives in the background. The chief performer, a thin, wiry native, with keen and restless black eyes, squatted on the stone pavement in front, flanked on either side by his wife and sister. Their entire apparatus consisted of a few bowls, pipes, boxes and wicker baskets, most rude in construction and not auggestive of any marvelous mechanism. And yet our conjurers went through with a most astonishing series of tricks, some of which baffle even Hermann, the prestidigitateur. A constant fire of words was kept up in Hindoostan between the performers, which seemed a sort of by-play connected with the various tricks, and was translated by Barabbas. Besides the ordinary performances, such as swallowing swords, knives and nails, and afterward drawing a complete "old junk shop" from his mouth, smashing our watches and burn-ing up our handkerchiefs, which were afterward returned unburt to our pocket, water, and immediately afterward produced the three powders in a dry state, sepa-rately, from his mouth. The formula often repeated was "ek-do teen, choulon," (one, two, three, look sharp, sister,) a rolling up of the eyes and pretended appeal to Vishnu, Shiva and Buddha, when a difficult transformation was about to take place. But the most wonderful thing was making a mango tree grow from the seed which he planted in a pot of earth before our eyes—a trick which I think has never been performed out of India. These things and many others, showing wonderful skill in the conjuring art, were done in broad daylight, within a few feet of us, and in the absence of the usual mechan-

All occupations in the East are hereditary—even "beggars" and "robbers." In the ast census returns of the north-western Provinces, 2,000 are set down as "hereditary buffoons and conjurors," and 1,100 are set down as "snake charmers"—and most curious of all, 6.372 are returned as "poets." saw an exhibition of snake-charming in Be nares, which had almost a tragedy The performer opened out his stock in from of the Bungalow, where we were sitting consisting of a boa constrictor, ten or twelve feet long, and as large round as my arm, two lively cobras, the most deadly of snakes and a variety of scorpions. He teased the cobras until they raised their hissing heads two feet from the ground, and with distended hoods and quivering tongues, repeatedly struck at the man's hand. Not drawing it away quick enough he was bitten by the snake on the fore finger, and a drop of blood appeared on the wound. The man took from his pocket a small black stone, looking like a bean, and pressed it for a moment on the wound to which it adhered, and went on with his exhibition. Then taking a small bit of light colored wood, he held it towards the cobras, and they instantly slunk back, as if terrified and completely cowed; another piece of wood had the same effect upon the scorpions. A rupee paid the shake charmer, and secured for me the two bits of wood and the little stone, which I brought away as mementoes.

host of itinerant venders of the specialities of Delhi. They tried to get across to us by bribing Barrabas, who made a good thing out of the ten to twenty per cent on all our purchases, which of course came out of our pockets. Most of these venders are proprietors of shops in the Chandnee Chowd, and bring quantities of cashmere shawls, Delhi embroidery, paintings and jewelry for your inspection, some of which are very tempting. Once admitted to your room, before a have time to forbid them, these men will have opened their bundles, and displayed before your now longing eyes the most exquisite fabrics of every color of the rainbow, covered with the finest embroidery in gold, silver thread and silk. If there should be any ladies in your party you may as well surrender at once, only stipulating for enough to be left in your purse for the expenses to Bombay; for the surrender at eautiful opera cloaks, ravishing Cashmere shawls, sandalwood ear-rings and miniature paintings on ivory, gold and silver filagree rnaments, with which you find yourself urrounded, would tempt an anchorite or any other hater of the pomps and vanities of life The prices asked are of course very difent from what is gladly taken after half a hour's bargaining; but it is a very unsafe method of purchase, unless one knows the actual value of the goods, for although you may get the article at half the price first demanded, you are by no means certain that you have made a good bar-

Our hotel was litterally beseiged by a

There are one or two shops, however, where the prices asked are the fair market value, and to these the traveler in search of genuine articles should go direct. At the shawl store of Manick Chund we were shown up a narrow and steep flight of steps to a small room, opening on one side to the court, and on the other to a narrow balcony overlooking the street. Chairs having been provided for us by the proprietor and his assistants, he unlocked a door leading into a large closet, and brought out a bundle, like a peddler's pack, tied up in white cloth. When untied we found this contained about twenty cashmere shawls, worth from five hundred to one thousand upees each. These were held up for our nection, one after another, then pushed away, and another bundle brought out, exhibited to us and thrown aside in the nost careless manner. Bundles of ber-nouses and jackets of cashmere cloth and relvet, most beautifully embroidered in silk and gold, chogas, or loose dressing gowns for gentlemen, smoking caps, table govers, etc., until the floor was two feet deep in a confused litter of the richest dry goods I ever saw. To my unsophisticated eyes these ravishing camel's hair shawls are nothing near so handsome as the imitations made in England and France. They are neither smooth nor glossy, and suggested the idea of having been washed, but not ironed. But my judgment on dry goods had been laughed at so many times that I had lost all nfidence in it, and under the instruction of the ladies of our party, who were familiar with Stewart's stock, I soon began to admire them. They are not made of "camels' hair" at all, but of wool of the Cashmere goat; each shawl being composed of many pieces, woven by different families, perhaps, and the labor of months. They are sewed very nicely together, the skill of blending colors being something marvelous, and can be altered and changed in bordeas and centers, and washed and mussed up without damage. In the east wealthy natives do not wear them over the shoulders, but male and female alike tie them around their waist. In India. dress serves the purpose of denoting rank. The peasant is clothed in cotton and the prince in cloth of gold; and even religion, caste and occupation are distinguished by well known and unchanging marks in cos-tumes. The fixity of fashion is as singular in Hindoostaa- as its infinite changeableness in New York and Paris. The patterns we see in the bazar to-day are those which were popular in the days of Shah Jehan. Hindoo workmen, though of the lowest class, possess such wonderful taste and culture, that their commonest productions are like poems in silk and velvet, which seems to prove 'the saying, that the finest taste is consistent with the deepest slavery of body and and mind. Dress with the Oriental is an art, and a Hindoo will never wear a robe or a turban, the ornamentation of which is not consistent with his idea of symmetry and grace. THE Charleston Courier says: "Dr. Stephen Smith, the Chief of the Health Department of the city of New York, has addressed a latter to De. F. CONSUMPTION. ITS CURE AND ITS PREVENTIVE.

By J. R. SCHENCE, M. D.

Many a human being has passed away for whose death there was no other reason than the neglect of known and indispetably proven means of cure. Those near and dear to family and friends are sleeping the dreamless slamber into which, had they calmiy adopted

BR. JONEPH H. NCHENCE'S SIMPLE TREATMENT, and availed themselves of his wonderfully efficacious metheines, they would not have failen.

Dr. Schenck, has in his own case proved that wherever sufficient vitality remains, that vitality by his medicines and his directions for their use, is quickened into leasting the year.

In this statement there is nothing presumptions. To the faith of the livuild is made no representation that is not a thousand times substantiated by living By J. H. SCHENCH, M. D.

and visible works. The theory of the curs by Dr. Scheuck's medicines is as simple as it is unfailing. Its philosophy requires no argument. It is self-assuring, self-convincing.

The Sea-weed Tonic and Mandrake Pills are used first two wespons with which the class of the malady is assailed. Two-thirds of the cases of communiton originate in dyspepsia and a fine-tionally disordered liver. With this condition the bronching tubes "sympathing" with the stomach. They respond to the morbinic action of the ilver. schenck's Pulmonic Syrup comes in to perform is unctions and to hasten and complete the cure. It interes at once upon its work. Nature can not be heated. It collects and ripens the impaired and liseased portions of the lungs. In the form of patherings, it prepares them for expectoration, and of in a very short time the malacty's vansquished the rotten throne that it occupied is removated and made new, and the patient, in all the dignity of re-carried vigor, steps forth to enjoy the manhood of womanhood that was GIVEN UP AS LOST. cond thing in, the parents is a line om until first get well; it is almo-rate taking cold when the line at it must be prevented or a cure which room until they get well; it is almost imposabile to prevent hading cold when the lungs are discased, but it must be prevented or a cure can not be effected. Fresh air and riding out, especially in this section of the country, in the full raid evider season, are all wrong. Physicians who recommend will bear, to get up a good circulation of b., d. The patients must keep in good spirits—be determined to get well. This has a great deal to do with the amentic and is the great point to grit.

To despair of cure after such evidence of its possibility in the worst cases, and moral certainty in all others, is sinful. Dr. Schenck a personal statement to the Faculty of his own cure was in these modest words:

They soon ripened the matter in my imags, and I would spit up more than a pint of offer a very close waster every morning for a long time. "As soon as that began to subside, my couch, ferrer pains, and night-sweats all began to leave me, and my appelle became so great that it was with difficulty that I could keep from eating too much. I soon gained my strength, and have grown in flesh ever since.

"I was welphed shortly after my recovery," added the Doctor, "then looking like a mere skeleton; my weight was only ninety-seven pounds; my present weight is two hundred and twenty-five (22) pounds, and for years I have enjoyed uninterrupted health."

Dr. Schenck in., this discontinued his professional visits to New York and Boston. He or his soon, Dr. J. H. Schenck, Ir., still continue to see patients at their Office.
